

TAMOJI'S OBSERVATIONS

LOGAN MILLER

RED BLUE GREEN PINK ORANGE YELLOW
BLACK WHITE PURPLE WITH BROWN WITH CYAN AND LIME

A M O N G U S

Algorithmic Fabrications
Clandestine Cult
Enforced Division
Social Comprehension
The Golden Leash

Black Wedding Dress
Functional Tree Bark
Muir Woods
The First Sound
Viral Seed

Anthropological Obfuscation

"I killed my sister today..."

_Book 23: Verse 3.3

The aspect of covert decision making has dominated the course of history, allowing elite individuals and families to alter the perception of society. The Bohemian Grove is one such location where a mysterious gentleman's club gather annually. The Bohemian Club is a "top-secret" group of influential men who make world-altering decisions. A number of these include the initial conception for the Manhattan Project in 1942, plans for the Nixon presidency (winning the election as well as the integration of the Watergate scandal), and the initial planning of the bay of pigs invasion. The Bohemian Grove is meant to be a place absent from business deals, stating that anyone in the club is told "WEAVING SPIDERS COME NOT HERE".

The Gentleman's Club is a dangerous association of the world's most powerful men. Although certain satanic practices have been rumored to have occurred there, the influence that this group has on the world is its most impactful aspect. The grove is quickly becoming famous, meaning that there are a multitude of other gatherings between highly influential people that are not widely known about. This begins to insert the question of who actually holds the power over the future of the economy, government, and global society.

The grove affects almost everything in our lives, and society, to some degree. A practiced gathering of elite men ignites more questions pertaining to why a club of this stature is necessary. Originally formed to be an artistic getaway, the club has grown over the past century to include presidents, billionaires, and other powerful world leaders. The existence of the Grove, and the clandestine cult, are not worrisome. However, the continued engagement across multiple generations is a verified means to question what decisions, that are affecting modern society, are being made in this anathematized forest.

Excessive Distress
Fear
Isolation Apprehension
Recurrent Nightmares
Separation Anxiety

Constituted Aggregation
Emotional Detachment
Internal Abasement
Starless Worlds
Suffering Filaments

Systematized Purification

"One day the flowers will grow again..."

_Tao Hua Yuan

Separation anxiety is a normal stage of development for infants and toddlers, however, the disorder can be diagnosed as having excessive symptoms during the developmental age of growth, leading to significant distress in terms of daily functionality. A lack of proper treatment for adults with separation anxiety can lead to a multitude of life compromising issues, some of which include the following:

Insomniac tendencies, increased levels or general anxiety, hair loss, heart disease, anorexia, impaired social skills, lack of concentration, night terrors, loss in personal and religious confidence, compulsive repetitive behaviors.

The sustained feeling of apprehension is a subtle, but effective way, to ruin one's life. Much like depression, the disorder eats at people from the inside out, making daily activities somewhat troublesome. A relegated mental space can be life threatening for some types of people, especially introverts.

Many people, and animals, have a small dosage of separation anxiety, however, when experienced on a more potent level it can be mentally draining to the point of suicide. Separation Anxiety has about 200,000 annual cases in the United States per year. This number has been consistent over the past several decades.

The effects of separation anxiety can be applied to larger systems than an individual. On a national scale, the detachment of a state from the rest of country could lead to several negatively founded actions. The removal of a piece from a system will have serious ramifications on both the governing body as well as the isolated component.

Consequently, the gesture of departure may also be considered as an act of cleansing; A self-motivated removal from a restrictive circumstance.

Greedy Love
Mammonism
Misdirected Avidity
Suggestive Narratives
The Primordial Sin

Ethical War Machines
Flight of Icarus
Misinformed Alchemists
Unatural Decay
Wuthering Heights

Fiction Almost

"The Future is a better key to the present than the past..."

_JG Ballard

Greed is the first sin, and love its precursor. The existence of modern day power constructs are due to greed. A desire to have what you never thought was possible has been plaguing our global society since the initial consumption of a tainted apple. These two base desires have shaped everything that we know to be true and false, and will continue to do so for all of humanities existence.

The intense levels of lust, defined by these primordial sins, indirectly affect all aspects of society. The painting of The Future already has a chosen artist, he just has to select which brush to use. A re-imagination of the Sourcebook should be continuously established in order to diminish the hunger of greed, consequently bolstering the potency of love.

The future is fictional, yet we all are destined to spend the rest of our lives there. All of humankind are the direct inheritors of the celestial gift of imagination; the desire to fabricate an intimate relationship with the imperfect.

Painted hot air balloons in the sky paired with terrestrial dancing machines of war, just an idea.

The Future is a better key to the present than the past, not that the door needs to be unlocked. However, what if said lock was picked, or the door was splintered from a thousand paper cuts? None of these questions matter as The Future is designed on profound impulses, warped to the will of the Misinformed Dreamer.

In this way, the door will take infinite forms. With greater predominance, the contents behind the door will be quantified as Infinite^(Infinity); continuously molding to the desires of the Alchemist.

I THINK YOU THINK TOO MUCH
 OF ME I THINK YOU THINK TOO
 MUCH OF ME I THINK YOU THINK
 ... TOO MUCH OF ME I THINK YOU
 THINK TOO MUCH OF ME I THINK
 YOU THINK TOO MUCH OF ME I ...
 I THINK YOU THINK TOO MUCH OF
 ME I THINK YOU THINK TOO MUCH
 OF ME I THINK YOU THINK TOO
 MUCH OF ME I THINK YOU THINK
 ... TOO MUCH OF ME I THINK YOU
 THINK TOO MUCH OF ME I THINK
 YOU THINK TOO MUCH OF ME I ...
 I THINK YOU THINK TOO MUCH OF
 ME I THINK YOU THINK TOO MUCH
 OF ME I THINK YOU THINK TOO
 MUCH OF ME I THINK YOU THINK
 ... TOO MUCH OF ME I THINK YOU
 THINK TOO MUCH OF ME I THINK
 YOU THINK TOO MUCH OF ME I ...

Failed Anthropocene
 Fetal Governments
 Paper Thin Programs
 Predestined Skin Dwellers
 Produced Loneliness

Adult Playground
 Audience Issues
 Reformative Words
 Unconscious by Choice
 Wrapped in Friction

No-Trust Funds

"Socialism for the rich, capitalism for the poor..."

_Michael Harrington

Government issued incentives can lead companies to "work for" the government under certain stipulations. Too much of this type of behavior can lead to a monopolized system of power where the free market has limited potential for growth as all the major products and essentials are controlled by large industries.

According to the CATO Institute, the US government spends around 100 billion dollars annually on corporate welfare. This money allows for companies to provide substantial health care benefits for their employees, although the maximum level of service that could be provided almost never is. On the other hand, the US government spends 15 billion dollars annually on social welfare. Ergo, only 15% of the money invested into corporations and our nations job infrastructure is being directed towards helping those that are not independently sustainable.

Corporate welfare thereby effects the pension status of many of the middle class citizens associated within a given company. Alternatively, it also affects the lower class of society by essentially taking away money from their social welfare system.

Corporate welfare is good in theory, but as most things are with the government, bad in practice. If the distributed money was equipped with a better oversight process, the refined system could greatly benefit the economy and influx of potential jobs. However, as it stands, the corporate welfare process is simply a way for the national government to manipulate which direction large companies are heading toward through monetary incentives.

Automaton Landscapes
Book of Emanations
Lukewarm Colored Room
Lunch Table Combat
Machine-Native Interactions

Bipolar Joints
Buckled Knees
Half-Bitten Tongues
Homeless Yard Sale
Predetermined Theft

Economical Farmers

"Be an Emperor for all outcomes..."

_Unknown

Companies seek to invest in themselves when they are confident that their shares are undervalued. In other words, the rich get richer and manipulate how a company is reflected in the market. This method of operating leaves little consideration to the other shareholders of the company, sometimes leaving the public out to dry in order to give the appearance that an institution is succeeding, even if it isn't.

Stock Buyback has a show-and-tell effect in the marketplace. Many of the leading companies, and by association their residing billionaires, take advantage of this system in order to leverage the perceived value of a company, in either a positive or negative manner. This is done for one of two reasons; to reduce the amount of money owed in taxes and / or to "earn", steal, as much money from shareholders in a company that is going into bankruptcy.

Stock Buybacks are very common, happening every year within a majority of companies. Large transactions of buybacks also occur somewhat frequently, and for the most part benefit both the residing company and their shareholders. However, there have been many instances where the buyback was initially conceived with ill-intent, or the process was not thought out thoroughly enough and severely damaged the wealth associated with the shareholders.

Having said this, a failed buyback hurts both the shareholders and the company itself, apart from a few niche situations. This means that it is in nearly everyone's interest for these transactions to be successful.

In the near future, companies could innovate into a complex system of economical farmers. Occupying a status of a fully autonomous entity that perceives their shareholders as a series of machines whose function is to maintain a distribution of wealth.

Controlled Anarchy
Geocentric Exoplanetology
Homogeneous Effort
Machine Husbandry
Poetics of Space

Abridged Autobiographies
Anthropological Reductionism
Communal Fallacy
Monitored Smoke Screens
Yesterday's Futures

Pocket Societies

"Don't let your mind limit itself..."

_Graham Shaw

A successful project is determined by the timing of quality ideas. Synchronized congealment between actively working partners exponentially increasing the level of productivity and influence of a given idea. Worker owned institutions attempt to play on this philosophy, encouraging collaborations between employees in order to yield greater annual profits. The greater standard for employee living and working conditions will be directly reflected as incentives to achieve this goal. However, companies encased in this way of business tend to lack a substantial backup plan.

Worker owned companies have a majority of their owners operating as ground level employees. This leads to the working class having a direct say in their own working conditions and level of pay. A ripple effect regarding the mental health, physical health, and social life are generally seen as beneficial side effects. However, if the company begins to suffer financially, all of the positive aspects that come with a worker owned environment can immediately be turned on its head and become overwhelmingly negative.

Any given company may benefit from heightened employee engagement for a number of reasons. Institutions with employee ownership often see greater productivity, higher profitability, and increased revenue. These successes also tend to persist over time, as the motivation of the working force continues to be the main driver of profits.

Although the idea of a worker owned agency excels at the level of an individual, it could never be sustainable for a larger empire of companies. Logistics for international, or interplanetary, systems under this ideology should be categorized as momentarily achievable.

